For Participants in LEA's Administration Network

The research is clear: the behavioral expectations implemented in the first three weeks will set teachers and students up for success with the next thirty-three weeks of school. Take that a step further—the intentional practices administrators establish in those crucial opening weeks don't just impact behavior; they shape the entire culture and climate of their school communities. This isn't news to you. But what can you do? See what Rethinking the Start of School: How Leaders Can Set the Tone for a Year of Belonging, Clarity, and Calm says. (Bridget Johnson in The Deans' Roundtable)

Are you looking for a blog to follow that will make you think and comes from a Lutheran educator's perspective? Check out FaithEdTech by David Black, a teacher at Lutheran High School Parker. It's all about "Exploring the intersection of the Christian faith, education, and technology. Including interests in new learning and baseball."

Are you looking for a podcast to listen to while grabbing your morning coffee or while out for a run? KFYO's The Coffee Hour, hosted by Andy Bates and Sarah Gulseth, brings you stories of the intersection of Lutheran life and a secular world. Give a listen and learn not only about Lutheran education but also the mercy work of the LCMS and its partners, as well as updates from missionaries and practical talk about how to live boldly Lutheran
